

Bob Upgren has dedicated his life to helping young people across the United States become everything they were created to be. For over 16 years, his basketball programs have garnered national attention and have been a consistent force in connecting some of the greatest players ever to don an NBA uniform to the youth who participate. He has personally worked side by side with Spud Webb, Rick Barry, A.C. Green, Meadowlark Lemon of the Harlem Globetrotters and Mike Miller. Even Michael Jordan's personal trainer, Tim Grover has partnered with Upgren to join in his mission of using sports to reach young people.

He is one of only three "new school" chalk artists in the world, using this amazing talent to create life-changing metaphors. He's here today to share with us his newest program called "the everything project". This program helps people discover their strengths, match them to their passions, and create awareness about cultural norms that often detract young people from their purpose.

His passion in life is leading youth to become everything they were created to be.
